EPA moves to roll back environmental protection requirements for utility coal ash sites

Companies with coal ash fill projects larger than 12,400 tons must have environmental protections in place, but EPA now only wants those requirements at sites that have geological vulnerabilities, with no upper limit on tonnage.

UPDATED

New Hampshire voters approve zoning ordinance that could affect Casella landfill plans

The company's interest in permitting a new landfill adjacent to a state park has stirred up local opposition. A temporary zoning ordinance was pitched as one way to control that process.
